

AUTUMN

orange and white variation

It was that dreary cold early winter day when the remnants of the leaves are falling and the first snow is in the air. I'm leaving work and outside the building I hear soft meowing from somewhere. After a while of searching, I found a tiny kitten in the bushes. There was no one from work, he didn't even know whose it might be. It was so small that it certainly wouldn't have survived the first snow.

I took the kitten home. The children were excited and our cat was happy to have a little friend at home. He was lying next to her, they were warming up... but she also pissed him off a bit, jumping on him, biting his paws and ears and wanting to play with him. I went to the attic for scraps of terry fabric and cut tassels and stripes for her to play with. I suddenly had a hankering for looping and the colors of the falling leaves inspired me...
